Why Brett Watson Needs to Resign

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

If Arcata City Councilmember Brett Watson cares about his city, he needs to resign. Immediately.

The third-party investigative report sustaining allegations that Watson engaged in the prolonged harassment of a city employee and abused his authority is damning. But even more damning are the hundreds of pages of emails and texts included with the report, which combine to paint a thorough picture of Watson as a man entirely unfit to hold public office. And perhaps most damning of all was Watson's conduct at Arcata's May 17 council meeting, at which he appeared defiant, remorseless and oblivious.

While there are myriad of issues at play here, four are paramount.

First, Arcata employees — like all employees and especially those who work in the public sector on our behalf — deserve a safe work space free of harassment. Full stop. They do not deserve to navigate their boss' temper tantrums and romantic overtures, nor fulfill their need for hugs. They should be able to leave work at work, and definitely should not be expected to spend countless hours on nights and weekends and vacations helping a boss through the emotional wreckage of their personal life. After roughly two years of Watson obliterating the boundaries between personal and professional life, the only way to make city hall a hospitable — and fully productive — work environment is for him not to be there.

Second, it's painfully clear some very real mental health issues are foundational to Watson's troublesome conduct. We are sympathetic to his battle with depression and anxiety, and truly hope he gets the help he needs to avoid further harm to the people around him and to achieve some sense of contentment. But public office is no place to work through such entrenched issues, as one needs to be on firm footing before taking on the problems of an entire community.

Third, Watson's conduct reveals a contempt for democracy, his role and his constituents. The report and supporting documents include instances of Watson trampling state open meeting laws, dismissing the will and input of his fellow councilmembers, and urging at least one city employee to "break the rules" and violate the trust of other councilmembers. Even if one ignores the very real, documented campaign of harassment, Watson's apparent contempt for democratic governance and thirst for power are disqualifying enough. This is not the conduct of a man who belongs in public office and his behavior at the council meeting showed equal disregard for his constituents.

Fourth, and perhaps most importantly, Watson's conduct at Tuesday's meeting showed him to be someone with a complete obliviousness or indifference to power dynamics; such a person simply cannot hold a position of power. Speaking in his own defense, Watson sought to discredit the employee he harassed and the investigation by insisting his prolonged relationship with her was consensual. In an effort to make his case, he told his fellow councilmembers the employee had made him cookies, and pointed to a dozen or so text messages the employee sent him, in which she says flattering things — "You'll be a great mentor," "You mean a lot to me, too," "Look forward to talking tomorrow." Watson was insistent that these moments proved the entirety of their relationship was consensual and mutual, unaffected by their respective positions. Of course, you can't look at any of these things in a vacuum.

For example, the employee's message telling Watson she looked forward to talking the next day comes amid an unsolicited text exchange initiated by her boss on a Sunday and is preceded by this:

"I'm doing OK. Thanks a lot for asking. I just still feel weird most of the time and it's hard for me not to worry about the same stuff I always worry about. I'm really trying to work on it though and get better. I realized Friday was 3 months since my dad died. I feel like such a big piece of me is missing without him. I think I'm doing OK though. I'm trying to be OK. I tried to relax a lot this weekend and I also got some errands done. Went for a short walk today, washed my car and worked a little bit. I'm looking forward to [our] walking tomorrow."

The employee responds asking where Watson would like to meet for the walk, then writes: "Hope you rest well tonight. 3 months is still very little time for real healing, your efforts will pay off — look forward to talking tomorrow."

Watson pointed to another text as "evidence" of the consensual nature of the relationship because the employee said he means a lot to her. But again, the context is vital to understanding the exchange.

At 6:53 p.m. on a Friday, Watson texts, apparently spiraling: "I'm really sad but I appreciate you so much. I'm sorry it's taking so long for me to get better. I'm sorry for all the time I take. I'm sorry for everything. I haven't cried in a long time. You mean so much to me."

The employee responds that "crying is very healthy," and offers some support as Watson grieves the death of his father, before telling him: "You mean a lot to me as well."

Abusive relationships are about power and control. In this case, Watson exercised a professional power over the employee as her boss — at times responding to her attempts to set boundaries by threatening to evaluate her performance in closed session or talk to other council members about her job. But he also exercises an emotional power and control, repeatedly crossing the bounds of a professional employee-employer relationship to share the intimate details of his mental health, his fragility, his struggles, and even his medications. Perhaps more troubling here, repeatedly ties the state of his mental health to their relationship, saying he's been able to get through hard times because of her, that his depression and anxiety have improved because of her, that he feels OK when he is with her, that those are the only times he feels OK. What's implied is that she's responsible for him. Were she to no longer be constantly available to talk to him about personal issues, he wouldn't be OK, his depression and anxiety would get worse, he wouldn't be able to get through the next hard time. The cumulative impact of this power dynamic is an employee constantly receiving personal texts from her boss, worried that if she doesn't respond or tells him to stop it might not only anger her boss, but send him into a spiraling mental health episode.

It's unclear — and unimportant — to what degree Watson intended to be manipulative or was simply oblivious. But he seemed to offer a hint toward the end of the May 17 council meeting, when he reiterated that he has no plans to resign but said, "if the staff member wants to take responsibility for her role in the relationship," he "would consider it."

And there it was, a man stripped of all his power in a relationship trying desperately to manipulate the situation to pull some back. In essence, Watson was again dumping responsibility for his actions on the employee, telling her if she admitted some of this mess he created was her fault, too, he would bring this awful nightmare to a close by walking away. Maybe. Well, at least he would "consider" it while retaining the power to change his mind as he has before.

Brett Watson — both in the conduct thoroughly documented in the investigative report and that he displayed May 17 — has shown himself to be fully unfit for office. He needs to resign immediately.

Setting the 'Record Straight'

Editor:

Regarding Allison Edrington's letter (Mailbox, May 19), I would like to set the record straight on the two points she made.

The Eureka City Council voted unanimously to approve a letter to the Wiyot tribe on March 18, 2014, contrary to what she said in her letter.

On the issue of what happened to Jefferson School 12 years ago, it was primarily that with the ending of tax increment money (Redevelopment) the city did not have the resources to buy and gift the property to the (now) Westside Community Improvement Association and partner with them to restore the school as a community center. Prevailing wage alone made it unfeasible if it was to become a city project.

The project was initially proposed and studies done by College of the Redwoods, not the city of Eureka, and eventually neighbors strongly objected to their proposal, citing noise, light pollution and the desire for a community center there, not building CR's city annex.

As disappointing as the decision was initially to Heidi and the community group, in meetings with council she told us she had many grants just waiting in the wings to develop the community center. The extensive studies done by CR created the basis to buy and rehabilitate the school as a community center — the fiscally responsible way to get it into their hands and control.

The city supported and helped them move the project forward and the end result was that the Westside Community Improvement Association owns and controls the center outright, with their own board of directors and plans.

in the "Now Playing" section of the NCJ (Screens, May 19). I was taken aback by the 2000 MULES listing. Instead of finding a synopsis of what 2000 Mules was actually about, my eyes were greeted by an acrid commentary.

In fairness to all the readers of NCJ, I would like to have it known what 2000 MULES is about. 2000 MULES examines what is on the minds of many voters, as our June 7 elections draw near: the integrity of our voting system. 2000 Mules is a well-documented, in-depth examination of the vulnerability of the system through mail-in ballots and the use of drop off boxes. Using video footage, geotracking, mathematics and the testimony of a whistle-blower concerning people or "mules" who are involved in carrying out the felonies, D'Souza reveals how the voting process has been corrupted.

Elena Wright, McKinleyville

Editor's Note: In fairness to our readers, we need to respond to the above letter to say NPR, Reuters, USA Today, the Associated Press, The Washington Post and even Fox News have thoroughly fact checked the claims in 2000 Mules and found that not only does the movie fail to provide any evidence of widespread voter fraud — the same conclusion reached by U.S. elections security officials, former Trump-appointed Attorney General William Barr and some 50 state and federal judges — but the movie is also based on “flawed analysis” and “faulty data.” D’Souza, meanwhile, really did plead guilty in 2014 to violating federal law by making campaign donations in the names of others to sidestep contribution limits. As such, we stand by the Journal’s May 19 summation of 2000 Mules: “Another steaming pile of propaganda and right-wing bullshit from Dinesh D’Souza, who pled guilty to felony charges stemming from illegal campaign contributions in 2014.”

Paid for by the HBE PAC, Humboldt Builders Exchange Political Action Committee FPPC# 1321055 Not authorized by a candidate or a committee controlled by a candidate

The hotel industry has begun a three-year comprehensive brand development program to promote Humboldt County, drawing attention to all the fantastic features here, including our art culture. Also, local art is represented at my motel with murals, the Otter Art project as well as redwood sculptures. I have also partnered with local artisans that sell their creations in my lobby. I believe Humboldt artists should have a right to guaranteed funding instead of the vague promise that Measure J represents. Instead of passing a general tax on hotels, let's vote no on Measure J and then, on June 8th, come together as a community with our Supervisors and propose a special use tax that ensures vital cultural aspects of Humboldt County will be served and funded.

No On Measure J

Points:

- The measure would increase the Transient Occupancy Tax (TOT) from 10 percent to 12 percent on lodging properties, campgrounds, and RV parks in the unincorporated County, making the tax rate higher than surrounding counties and the local towns within Humboldt.
- While County staff and elected officials have said that the money would go to specific purposes, it would go into the unrestricted general fund, which means the County could use it for any purpose. There is simply no law or ordinance to ensure the best use of the TOT funds.
- The amount raised by Measure J would likely only be between $600,000 and $800,000 annually. With all the services listed in the measure needing support, how far would those funds stretch?
- The wording of Measure J suggests it will support a variety of worthy causes, such as rural emergency services, children's mental health, repairing county roads, emergency communications systems, and the arts. However, the language is misleading.

FPPC: Bushnell Right to Recuse Herself from Cannabis Tax Vote

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

Humboldt County Second District Supervisor Michelle Bushnell was correct to recuse herself from discussing and voting on local cannabis tax relief earlier this year, the California Fair Political Practices Commission has advised, finding she had an economic interest in the issue.

The FPPC informed Bushnell of its decision in a recent letter, which was sent in response to her request for “advice” and, as such, is not a legally binding opinion. But the FPPC was unequivocal that Bushnell’s holding state and county permits to cultivate 1 acre of cannabis on a property she owns in southeastern Humboldt County legally prohibits her from voting on changes to local cultivation taxes, at least as they pertain to outdoor farms. The fact that Bushnell has not begun cultivating the property is irrelevant, the FPPC wrote, as changes to the tax “would have a reasonably foreseeable, material financial impact on [her] real property interest.”

A possible exception — which applies when an elected official’s financial interest in the issue is “indistinguishable from the effect on the public generally” — does not apply, the FPPC found, as Bushnell’s permitted cultivation area is roughly four-times larger than the average permitted cultivation site of one-quarter of an acre. As such, a decision financially impacting the property would constitute a “unique effect,” the FPPC found.

The issue of Bushnell’s potential conflict of interest burst into public view as the board was set to hold a Feb. 1 public hearing to consider reducing or repealing Measure S, a voter approved annual tax of $3 per square foot of indoor cultivation area, $2 per square foot of mixed light cultivation and $1 per square foot of outdoor cultivation. Spurred by the state’s crashing wholesale cannabis market and having long complained of being overtaxed and over-regulated, local farmers had been making a concerted effort for weeks to get the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors to take up the issue.

A lot of that effort — in the form of calls and emails — was reportedly directed at Bushnell, whose district is home to the majority of Humboldt County’s licensed farms and who sat on the board’s ad-hoc cannabis subcommittee with Fifth District Supervisor Steve Madrone. The push worked, as the subcommittee asked that the issue be put before the full board at a special hearing.

But when the Feb. 1 meeting opened, Bushnell announced she would have to recuse herself — an announcement that seemed to blindsides the dozens of representatives of the cannabis industry who would later address the board that day.

In retrospect, it seems it shouldn’t have.

When campaigning for office in 2020, Bushnell was open about being in the process of seeking a cultivation permit and many seemed to relish her election as the county’s first “out-of-the-closet cultivator” to serve in perhaps the world’s most famous cannabis county. Bushnell also is listed as the property owner for two other permitted grows — a fact she has similarly been open about. But the prospect of Bushnell recusing herself from a vote was not something that had seemingly been discussed publicly, even as Bushnell participated in other votes impacting the industry. Perhaps most notable among those votes was one in October to allow cannabis farmers to make late payments without penalty on the second installment of 2020 Measure S payments.

For her part, Bushnell said the issue first came up during a conversation with her lawyer after Boot Leg Farms LLC, a company owned by she and her husband, received a state cultivation permit Jan. 3. Still unsure if they would cultivate the property given the state of the cannabis market in California, Bushnell realized if she did, she could face a Measure S tax bill of up to $43,560. Bushnell said her lawyer was adamant: “You cannot do this.”

The FPPC has now essentially agreed.

But Bushnell’s case seems to underscore the complexities at play under California’s Political Reform Act of 1974 and associated laws designed to promote transparency and accountability, in part by purging conflicts of interests from politics. It also leaves a murky picture of who will be participating in future cannabis-related votes of the board.

One thing the FPPC's opinion does not address head-on is whether the other two permitted cultivation operations on land Bushnell owns are potentially problematic or exactly how they should be viewed under the law.

Approved in May of 2021, Chronic Creek LLC has a permit for a 22,000-square-foot, mixed-light farm on a property near Connick Creek in the Garberville area. The grow is owned and operated by Bushnell's friend, Tiffany Smith, who both said pays no rent for use of the property under an agreement to help the business get started.

"I said, 'Once you're up and running, I'll rent you the property. And after two or three years, if you're successful, we'll talk about you buying the property,'" Bushnell told the Journal in March.

While Smith told the Journal she has not yet cultivated on the property, it seems Bushnell would have a potential economic interest in the business becoming successful. But that's pretty hypothetical at this point.

Potentially more complicated is — Hum Fire LLC — the farm owned and operated by Bushnell's son, which is fully permitted to cultivate 17,900 feet of outdoor cannabis and has been operational since 2019, according to tax records. Bushnell reported to the FPPC that she charges her son no rent for the property and has no stake in his business. But Hum Fire LLC was affected by that October vote of the board to waive penalties for late tax payments — an option her son availed himself of, according to county tax records.

State regulations are clear that benefits to family members need to be taken seriously, as well.

"A public official has a disqualifying financial interest if the decision will have a reasonably foreseeable material financial impact, distinguishable from the effect on the public generally, directly on the official or the official's immediate family," states regulation 18700.

So would Bushnell's October vote present a "disqualifying financial interest?" It seems complicated. It seems likely it did have a "foreseeable material financial impact" on the farm's operations — that, after all, is exactly why farmers requested the penalties be waved — but quantifying that isn't straight forward.

Based on the FPPC's analysis of Bushnell's case, it seems like the issue would hinge on whether that benefit was "distinguishable" from the public generally.

In asking that question regarding Boot Leg Farms in Bushnell's case, the FPPC indicated the "public generally" exception would apply if the benefit was given to at least 25 percent of the population — in this case, 25 percent of local businesses. In Humboldt County, the FPPC found that cannabis business licenses account for approximately 15 percent of all business licenses locally. But commercial cannabis permits do not require a business license, so "there does not appear to be a feasible way to accurately determine what percentage of businesses in the county would be affected."

The FPPC deemed the matter moot when it came to Bushnell's farm because its size alone presented the potential for a "unique benefit" but it's unclear if that would apply to her son, whose permitted cultivation area is less than half that of Bushnell's but still larger than average.

All this creates a murky picture moving forward, as Measure S taxes — which the supervisors voted to reduce by 85 percent for 2022, to be re-evaluated in 2023 — seem destined to come back before the board.

While the FPPC's opinion was unequivocal that Bushnell should not participate in discussions, much less vote, on whether to change cannabis cultivation taxes on outdoor farms, which would impact her business, it left the door open for her to participate in votes that would impact taxes on indoor or mixed-light cultivation. Under such a scenario, the board would meet — with Bushnell recused — to discuss changes to taxes affecting outdoor cultivation. Then, once that matter is fully settled, Bushnell could return for discussion and votes on taxes affecting the other growing methods as long as those discussions do not "result in a reopening of, or otherwise financially affect, the decision from which the official was disqualified."

But, the FPPC cautions, whether a decision facing the board can be segmented as such depends on a lot of case-by-case specifics, saying Bushnell "may wish to seek further advice" if that's a route she and the board wish to pursue.

Bushnell, who told the Journal in March she regretted having to recuse herself from the Measure S votes and hoped the FPPC would clear the way for her to participate moving forward, was not immediately available to comment for this story.

It Might Be Time to Get Totally Motherfucking Unhinged

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

At Robb Elementary School in Uvalde, Texas, crosses memorialize victims of the May 24 shooting, where an 18 year old killed 19 students and two teachers with a legally purchased AR-15-style rifle. Shutterstock

We have voted and we have debated. And here we are with 120.5 civilian guns per 100 people and an endless stream of gun violence and school shootings. Gunshot wounds are now the leading cause of child death in the United States.

Peaceful marches are powerful and energizing. But even after children who survived the Parkland school shooting shamed us with their mass protests, we are still sending thoughts and prayers. In the fight against gun violence, civility, has gotten us dick.

But there's another path that's proven effective in the last two years. That's going absolutely off the fucking rails. Consider: Rambling about crackpot theories, screaming into the microphone at school board meetings and pitching violent toddler fits at supermarkets and dental offices have collectively moved the powers that be to yield to anti-maskers. A massive body of scientific research was no match for howling anti-vaxers and now our kids are in public schools without COVID vaccine requirements. Obstructing public meetings by yelling and harassing public officials has kept this country from doing all it can to fight a deadly virus for which we have vaccines and simple preventative measures. Despite a million dead. This shit works.

Is the swearing bothering you? Cool. Write a letter. Stand up and bravely use your voice to complain about me offending your sensibilities with my foul mouth instead calling or writing local, state and federal representatives or the NRA because I guess a woman writing the word "fuck" is more offensive than 19 children shot dead in a single school room, their ruined bodies identified by the DNA from the cheek swabs of their crying parents outside. Fuck you. Maybe my tone is alienating. Maybe you could have been on board with legislation that would have kept a few more children from bleeding out in classrooms and folks on grocery runs from gasping their last bloody breaths into the linoleum because someone with a gun that didn't even need to reload shot them up at the market if I wasn't so abrasive. Well, if the sweet faces of the children who died in Texas — Jesus, at Sandy Hook a decade ago — aren't enough to win you over to protecting living, breathing people from random, brutal violence, I doubt I ever had a chance.

Back to the screaming. Airlines shrugged off the concerns of their staff and flight attendants and pushed for lifting masking rules because a segment of their customers were pissing themselves with rage and high off their imagined oppression to the point of attacking people in goddamn coach. Looking at the videos of Karens and Kens making absolute asses of themselves in public, spitting and shaking and escalating to avoid wearing a 2-millimeter-thick mask — what could be more humiliating? Wait, I know: Continuing to go to work and pay taxes in a country that chooses its obsession with guns over the lives of adults and children alike every single fucking day.

If you're waiting for me to attempt to persuade you with statistics or studies, please hold your breath forever. At this point, if you think legislation — fucking any legislation — that would even slow the flood of guns into the American melee isn't necessary, I can't help you. If you refuse to see what every other nation in the world can and respond to it like the emergency it is, fuck off. If you're not willing to admit to a difference between a hunting rifle and the kind of weapon engineered to mow down soldiers from 600 yards, fuck off. I no longer have the time or energy to engage with willfully obtuse or dishonest people who just want what they want. Feel free to ramble about how this is a mental health crisis and not about people in mental crisis getting guns easier than a driver's license because right now I'm busy thinking about the mental health of little kids and teachers practicing active shooter drills and the thousands of parents who bury children killed by guns each year. Not even the adults. Just the children. Oh, should I not politicize their deaths? Eat shit. Actual shit.

Protesting outside Brett Kavanaugh's home led to swift, bipartisan legislation protecting him and other U.S. Supreme Court justices. But that's organized. That's a unified and coordinated protest. What I'm talking about is the slow drip of crazy, where you see someone in a normal setting and your hackles go up because something about their T-shirt slogan tells you they are about to pop off at the first available opportunity. I'm talking about a relentless campaign of dispersed fury. No justice, no peace goddamn anywhere.

How about the police jump in and start protecting children? I'm not referring to the criticism surrounding the police on site in Texas. Well, actually, sort of. I mean police organizations using their political power and influence to make us safer. Because instead of investing time, energy and considerable funding into defending racist cops, disproportionately powerful police unions could instead fight a proliferation of firearms so deadly that officers find it necessary to wait on tactical teams to confront a single teenager. (Don't give me the Blue Lives Matter pitch — my father was a decorated Bronx cop, so stow it.) Maybe superior firepower in the hands of every fucker who can afford it is not safe for cops, either. In fact, maybe having more guns than people in this country is part of what's turned every traffic stop into a potential deadly encounter. Maybe the Thin Blue Line should park itself in front of gun manufacturers, the NRA and the elected motherfuckers who so desperately court police endorsements.

Listen to me: The NRA is making it easier to get guns that kill cops and civilians. For all their talk about more guns making us safer, the NRA isn't allowing guns at its own fucking leadership meeting because it's not safe for the former president. Just think of all those good guys it doesn't want carrying guns.

As much as this death cult spikes my urge to burn it all down figuratively and some days literally, I'm not advocating violence. Just that we make every day a nonstop shitshow and see how that works out. That we act like people are easily accessing war-level weapons and killing civilians every day. That we act like they're shooting at fucking children. Because they are. ●

Bad Women Like Me

By Linda Stansberry

linda@northcoastjournal.com

When I was 24 years old, I worked the graveyard shift at a youth hostel in San Francisco's Tenderloin. It was fine, sometimes even fun. I rarely felt unsafe in that neighborhood, but I often felt unsafe while doing my job.

There was the long-term resident, a student, who would call me at the front desk and try to keep me on the phone while he masturbated.

I told my boss. The boss talked to him. The calls stopped, but I still had to see him every day.

There was the short-term resident who commented on our bodies, staring at my friend's breasts and telling her that he "liked his girls a little bit thick."

We told the boss. The boss talked to him. The comments stopped, but we still had to serve him every day for the remainder of his stay.

There was the co-worker who, after I started dating someone he knew, came up to me one morning and shoved a banana toward my mouth, asking me repeatedly to take it, take it. I had known this man for two years and thought of him as a kind, avuncular figure. For some reason, after my relationship status changed, his behavior did too. It was sad and shocking.

This time I told my boyfriend. Long story short, nothing happened. I still had to work with him until the day he quit for unrelated reasons and my coworkers thought it rude that I refused to hug him goodbye.

Writing all these things down, one thing after another, makes my stomach feel like it's full of bees. It was all so long ago, but the rage I swallowed is still down there, buzzing sharp and hot. Honestly, until today, I did not connect them in my mind as symptomatic of a pervasive toxicity in the place I worked, a place that I genuinely loved despite the crappy hours, mediocre pay and soul-numbing sadness of the neighborhood around us. Not long after the banana incident, I made a complaint to the general office about one of our managers, who had this pattern of hiring young women, dating them for a while and then dumping them. Turnover at the front desk was getting ridiculous.

"Are you really going to do this? Are you going to make me file a sexual harassment report?" asked a different manager, a friend of mine.

I told him I was, and the heavy sigh I got in response should have told me everything I needed to know about what was to come. All of the managers had to watch a training video, the first step in the company's tiered complaint system. I assume my complaint was documented, but I really don't know. I still had to work with him. I chose to transfer to a different location. I heard through the grapevine that his behavior escalated and eventually caught up with him, almost a decade later. I do not know if that organization had a #MeToo reckoning after I left, but I really hope it did.

There is a special kind of shittiness about having to continue working with someone whose behavior you have called out as inappropriate. The message I got from my experiences is that there is no advantage to speaking out. I know I am not alone. Contrary to what some conspiracy theorists will have you believe, speaking out against harassment almost never benefits the accuser.

I think about all of this when I read about the employee Arcata City Councilmember Brett Watson harassed. I feel deep empathy for her and also deep frustration with him. But I reserve my deepest feelings, that stomach full of buzzing rage, for the culture that has made this behavior so easy to perpetuate and unrewarding to address. I am mad, and will continue to be mad, that so many of us just swallow that poison because we know that if we speak out, we'll hear something like this:

"He's just kind of a physical guy, it didn't mean anything."

"You're too sensitive."

"I don't think he really meant it that way, he's married, you know?"

"He's not stalking you, he just has a crush on you."

"In his culture, it's totally normal to act that way."

"Of course he tried to pinch your butt, why do you think he keeps coming here and tipping you so much?"

"Of course he promoted you, he likes you, doesn't he?"

"It's too bad your job requires you to dress sexy, I think it gives guys the wrong idea."

"You're so straight-laced, he was just trying to make you smile."

"He was drunk, he doesn't usually act like that."

"He's having a rough time at home, he usually doesn't act like that."

"He's just kind of socially awkward."

"You must like it a little bit, or else you'd tell him to stop."

"It just goes to show, men and women can't be friends, something always goes wrong."

"Yeah, that guy's a creep, don't be alone with him.”

“Nothing he’s doing is illegal, you know, but just steer clear of him and you should be fine.”

I have heard all of this crap, and you have heard all of this crap, and more. We’ve been told what we wore, how we acted, where we were, how much we drank are the reasons we were raped or harassed or abused. And as a final indignity we’re often asked, literally or implicitly, to accept an apology and move on. To not make it weird, because for some reason our safety is less important than everyone else’s comfort. Making everything OK is the emotional labor good women are socialized to perform.

Good women don’t make things awkward and more complicated for everyone else. They take on the shame that should be the burden of their harasser, because if they don’t, the world will know what to call them. Witches. Troublemakers. Attention-seekers. Man-haters. Gold-diggers. Sluts. The kind of woman no one will protect. Bad women.

Well, it has been my privilege to be a bad woman all of these years. A real privilege, the kind many people who could suffer economic, social and physical reprisal for speaking out don’t have.

In 2006, right around the time I left that crappy job, a woman named Tarana Burke started the conversation we are still having today, about sexual assault and harassment. It took until 2017 for her work to reach the mainstream and become what we now refer to as the #MeToo movement. We are seeing the progress of that movement today in how the behavior of Brett Watson has been addressed by the city of Arcata and its city council. The situation as it stands is not perfect, and I really feel for the employee who has to continue working with the man who harassed her. But it feels light years away from the experiences of my early working life, different than how it might have been handled even a decade ago.

This is a weird time to be a woman. We are living through a cultural backlash against all of the progress we’ve made over the past decades and there is still so much work left to do. But I am not tired. I am one of the lucky ones to know for certain that I live in a community I can be proud of, a place full of bad women like me. ●

Interior Opens Offshore Wind Comment Period

The U.S. Department of the Interior announced May 26 that it would publish a Proposed Sale Notice on May 31, opening a 60-day public comment period on plans to open lease areas off the California coast — including one off Humboldt Bay — to bidding for the creation of offshore wind farms.

“The Biden-Harris administration is moving forward at the pace and scale required to help achieve the president’s goals to make offshore wind energy a reality for the United States,” Interior Secretary Deb Haaland said in a press release announcing the move forward with what would be the first-ever offshore wind lease sale on the United States’ West Coast. “Today, we are taking another step toward unlocking the immense potential of offshore wind energy (off) our nation’s west coast to help combat the effects of climate change while creating good-paying jobs.”

The proposed notice of sale (PNS) posted May 31 and provides detailed information about the proposed lease areas, proposed provisions and conditions, and details of the auction. The May 26 press release notes potential stipulations that would give preference to bidders who pursue community benefit agreements with surrounding communities and ocean users (commercial fishing fleets are mentioned specifically), those who will commit to investing in training an offshore wind workforce and those who engage with tribes and underserved communities “in a manner that minimizes and mitigates their projects’ adverse effects.”

In response to the DOI announcement, a trio of local environmental groups — the Environmental Protection Information Center, Humboldt Baykeeper and the North-coast Environmental Center — sent out a joint press release applauding the important step and pledging to work to safeguard the environment as the process moves forward. The proposed lease sales, they said, mark the beginning of the next chapter in the development of offshore wind.

“Through negotiating community benefit agreements, we can ensure that projects go above and beyond to protect the environment, create family-wage jobs and work together with sovereign tribal governments and our fishing communities,” NEC Executive Director Caroline

Griffith said in the release.

EPIC Executive Director Tom Wheeler said the organizations will monitor and participate in project development to ensure coastal ecosystems are protected in the quest for renewable energy development. Baykeeper Director Jenn Kalt, meanwhile, said the real work to assess environmental impacts and work to mitigate them will come after the leases are sold.

“Once developers enter into lease agreements, those site assessments will begin and we’ll have a much better understanding of how to protect wildlife and their habitats as these projects move forward,” Kalt said.

Comments received on the document during the 60-day period will be considered before the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management decides whether to publish a final sale notice, which would include a time and date for the sale and a list of companies qualified to participate.

For further details on the project and how to comment, view the proposed sale notice at www.federalregister.com.

Kinetic Rides Again

The rest of the world is trying to get back to “normal” but here in Humboldt, we’re just happy to go out in the fresh air and get weird again. After two years of paused and remote races, the human-powered Kinetic Grand Championship once again rolled around the Arcata Plaza, down the Manila Dunes, into Humboldt Bay, up and over the hills and across the finish line on Ferndale’s Main Street. A flying saucer, giant praying mantis and a sushi stand were among the fleet of fast and flaming, freak-flag-flying machines. There was no shortage of Glory or awards for it — the 26 categories cover everything from Engineering (congratulations, Cowbell Moosical Theater), Art (ham it up, KHAM), the Golden Dinosaur for the first post-plaza breakdown (tough break, Challah for the Glory) and the Golden Flipper awards for best capsizes on sand and sea (Lemonheads and Miss Guided’s Quantum Quest, respectively). In the end, Humpbacks of Notre Dame took the Grand Championship with a breakneck time of 11 hours and 27 minutes. Intrepid photographer Mark McKenna followed the racers on their wild journey, documenting the madness for posterity and, of course, Glory. Rocky Horror Revial Rises in Ferndale

By Tiggerbouncer Custodio

frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

I wish I'd brought my Erotica red lip stain to Ferndale Repertory Theatre to mark the first-time audience members' foreheads with a large V to anoint them into the cult that is the The Rocky Horror Show, first mounted in 1973 with music and lyrics by Richard O'Brien, and adapted for the screen as The Rocky Horror Picture Show in 1975. For unaware virgins: Every person thrust into the theater for this fun production can be a part of the raunchy, campy action. While the actors perform, the audience, like voyeurs and hecklers given consent, call out lines and questions — you can even pay $5 for a bag of toys at the box office to enhance the experience. There are always people who have come repeatedly, ensuring a good time. The (in)appropriate number of obscenities screamed at the actors during the show will help you relax into it.

Fiancées Brad and Janet (Craig Woods and Holly Portman) have a blow out and end up at a castle during the night. Frank N. Furter (Rigel Schmitt) — um, a scientist? — reveals his creation Rocky (Keenan Hilton) to the — um, odd? — assistants.

That's the plot. But Rocky is so over the top, anything more would spoil the layers that are already excessive in the best ways.

Rocky's appeal is its zany characters (not excluding the band and audience) and ridiculous scenes. This cast is challenged to step up its performance amid the scene-stealing antics of phantoms Carin Billings and Lillian Damron. From the hilarious dances (expertly choreographed by Cleo Deorio) to a monitor scene the audience's hoopla undoubtedly extended, the pair is impressive. Emma Dobbins's commitment and energy as Riff Raff stands out as she's one of few able to create balance with the music and sound to clearly fill the space with her singing. She's flanked by Veronica Ruse as Magenta and Stephanie McGear as Columbia, both infectiously joyful in their roles. Alex Boulton's Eddie is a star's cameo that bursts onto the stage before getting axed. Brilliant. Brad Harrington's impossible job of playing straight man to these wild performances catalyzes everything. His take on the Criminalogist is dynamic, everchanging and hilarious, worthy of repeat attendance. It is easy for (asshole) Brad and (slut) Janet, as the audience shouts, to get steamrolled into obscurity by the sheer absurdity of the other characters. However, Woods and Portman hold their own. Woods with his incredible voice (though it was almost too good for his character) and Portman with her masterclass in melodramatics. She excels when she uses her chest voice (as in the “Touch Me” scene) to create more dynamics in her high-pitched character.

Hilton’s rendition of Rocky is refreshingly played as almost unaware of his own sexiness. It creates comedy during his muscle flexing and an innocence that has been portrayed as stupidity with other, less skilled, actors. The gravity necessary to keep the scale of characters in his orbit is successfully accomplished by Rigel Schmitt’s Frank N. Furter. He has a timing and confidence with his delivery that enables the audience’s lines to fit seamlessly. His delivery has none of the slight stutter that might appear in the gaps sprinkled throughout the show for lines flung from the audience. By tasting the words in the script and inviting the audience to vicariously experience the feel of them, Schmitt’s Frank could be even more mesmerizing in “antici ... pation” than it already is.

Director Cleo DeOrio has assembled wonderful talent and thanks go to David Powell for live music played by a band that obviously loves the score. Witnessing the joy of Mike Craghead, Amber Grimes and Jeremy Cotton as they danced while playing and Jesse Franzen undulating in the rhythm, was freeing. Denise Ryles’s costumes felt less punk than I’ve seen but were sufficient in their recreation. I appreciate Michael Foster’s simplicity in light design, especially “Rose Tint My World,” which is stunning. Michael Charles Smith’s scenic design is intriguing in gray and black, with accents of deep red and a painted castle backdrop looming over everything.

Rocky Horror Show is not everyone’s cup of Earl Grey sipped with an erect pinky but is a cure to the elitism that births rebellion against prescribed normalcy. The conservative and quaint town of Ferndale hosting scantily clad, gender bent, cultish thespians who gravitate to this production amid the unsuspecting family-fun crowd is pure comedy and a show in itself.

Ferndale Repertory Theatre’s The Rocky Horror Show continues Fridays and Saturdays at 8 p.m. and Sundays at 2 p.m. through June 19. Call 786-5483 or visit www.ferndalerep.org.

Zandezi Asks, ‘Where is the Justice?’

By Pat Bitton

That’s the fundamental question in Zimbabwe Theatre Academy’s Zandezi, now playing at Dell’Arte’s Carlo Theatre in Blue Lake. What matters more to a man: that he prove he’s been wrongly convicted, or benefit from an amnesty program? That he care for a sick cellmate or accept that sufficient food comes at a price? That he patiently await justice or take advantage of an opportunity to escape?

Dilemmas abound in this spare, powerful, universally relevant piece set in a prison in Zimbabwe and drawing the audience in through judicious breaching of the fourth wall. Devised and performed by two exceptional actors, Cadrick (Khe Khe) Msongelwa and Ronald Sigeca. Msongelwa holds a Professional Training Program certificate in physical theatre from Dell’Arte International School of Physical Theatre and Sigeca holds a Professional Physical Theatre certificate from the Zimbabwe Theatre Academy. The academy is a full-time, one-year professional program founded by Dell’Arte International alumni Lloyd Nyikadzino and Teddy Mangawa in partnership with Dell’Arte International and the Pamberi Trust. On June 25, Msongelwa and Sigeca will accept the 31st annual Prize of Hope from Aesen Theatre and Dell’Arte International on behalf of the Zimbabwe Theatre Academy Trust.

Directed by Lloyd Nyikadzino, Zandezi is the epitome of physical theater. With only minor adjustments to their prison uniform costumes and a large metal tub as their only prop, Msongelwa and Sigela convey the eternal struggle for justice and survival in a harsh yet mundane, cruel yet comradely environment through movement, music and precisely chosen words.

Zandezi revolves around Philani Dube, who was accused of a crime he did not commit, simply because he bought a cell-phone on the street that had previously belonged to an actual criminal. The only witness who might be able to prove his innocence has disappeared and his lawyer will not search for her unless he’s paid a lot of money that Dube does not have. Freedom costs money. After he’s jailed, Dube learns his wife Lucy has given birth to twin boys but his pride prevents him from letting Lucy see how prison has changed him. By the time he has come to terms with who he has become, the COVID pandemic has arrived, no visitors are allowed, one of his sons has died from the virus and Dube cannot attend his funeral.

Along the way, Dube learns a great deal about the realities and injustices of prison life, starting with the widely accepted presumption that “half the people in here are innocent and half the people out there are guilty.” He learns he will be locked up from 3 p.m. to 6 a.m., and the remainder of each day is an endless cycle of work (“In here you are a slave”), bad food, exercise and inmate-created entertainment “to keep our sanity.” It is a dance of power and control that begs the question: “Who is dependent on whom?” He learns that accused rapists will be raped and it costs five cigarettes to use a working toilet. He also learns how to put on an act for the courts to petition for his freedom.

When he finally regains his freedom, Dube finds the world is a changed place. His wife has married someone else. He can’t find work, noting, “It’s like you have leprosy — no one wants you.” He resorts to breaking into houses and the cycle begins again. And this is justice? You be the judge.

Zandezi was created in 2018 in Zimbabwe, where it won awards for Best Production and Best Actors from the Bulawayo Arts Awards in 2019, Best Director from the National Arts Merit Awards in 2019, and Best Production at the 2021 Jika International Dance Theatre Festival. With the relaxation of pandemic restrictions, the Zimbabwe Theatre Academy has been able to tour the production in the U.S., with performances at Georgetown University and in Seattle and Portland. The Blue Lake run will be followed by a special presentation at Pelican Bay State Prison through Dell’Arte’s participation in the California Arts in Corrections Programming.

Performances of Zandezi will continue in the Carlo Theatre Friday, June 3 and Saturday, June 4 at 8 p.m., and on Sunday, June 5 at 2 p.m. Proof of COVID vaccination and masks required. Tickets are by donation, starting at $5. Call 668-5663 or visit www.dellarte.com.

Flying High at the Redwood Coast Kite Festival

By Mark Larson

For an event that members of Humboldt Kiteers didn’t start planning until three months ago, the Redwood Coast Kite Festival in Eureka on Saturday, May 21 turned out to be an artistic display of kiting and kite creation. It was also a whole lot of fun for those who attended on the first day of the two-day festival. Event planners also had a bit of weather luck, given that the high winds of Thursday and Friday had subsided to almost perfect kite-flying conditions under sunny skies on Saturday.

Local members of Humboldt Kiteers revived the Kite Festival in Halvorsen Park along Humboldt Bay this year decades after it had been moved to Oregon in the 1990s. Group members who regularly fly kites at Halvorsen Park and elsewhere locally had quickly organized a team effort among local sponsors, the Ink People Center for the Arts and local artisans who sold kites and other offerings in vendor tents at the event.

“I loved the way everything came together,” said Humboldt Kiteers member Paul “Kite King” Woodard, of Eureka, on Saturday as he roamed the park helping kite flyers get airborne. “It’s amazing to see the turn-out, the support from the sponsors, donors of T-shirts, vendors, musicians and all the kites. We definitely plan to do it again next year.”

Adults and children roamed the community-flying area with their own kites, some of which they had just made in a children’s kite-making workshop. Others wandered east under the Samoa Bridge to watch demonstrations of large inflatable and other types of kites (all dependent on the varying wind speeds at any given moment). At one point, the sky was filled with fish and a huge octopus, as well as a couple dragons. Live music accompanied the event and children also enjoyed a couple of candy drops carried aloft by a huge airfoil kite. Visit the www.humboldt-kiteers.com for details on where you can see Kites as Art installations by artists and galleries associated with the Ink People. Eureka Boats Leave the Salmon Biting

By Kenny Priest
fishing@northcoastjournal.com

Eureka resident Peter LaVallee with a nice king caught Tuesday. The ocean sport salmon season in the KMZ closed after Tuesday but will reopen Aug. 1.

Last Friday and Saturday produced some of the best ocean sport salmon fishing we've seen in years — or maybe ever. It was nearly impossible not to get limits if you were anywhere near the right spot. And then the winds blew in and the seas turned rough, keeping the fleet tied up Sunday and Monday. Ocean conditions were much improved Tuesday, the last day of salmon season until Aug. 1., and boats of all shapes and sizes made the run to the last known location of a large school of kings, hoping for the magic to strike again. And it did. The fish weren't in that exact location but they didn't go far. After a little scouting and the schools located, it was whack and stack. What a way to end the first half. So now with salmon closed for a couple months, the focus will be squarely on the white meat variety: Pacific halibut and rockfish.

Weekend marine forecast

Ocean conditions look excellent through the work week before the wind picks Saturday. Friday's forecast calls for winds out of the southwest up to 5 knots and waves west 4 feet at 11 seconds and southwest 2 feet at 18 seconds. Saturday is looking a little rougher, with south winds 10 to 15 knots and waves southwest 6 feet at five seconds and southwest 2 feet at 16 seconds. Sunday looks a little better, with west winds 5 to 10 knots and west waves 5 feet at eight seconds and southwest 2 feet at 16 seconds. These conditions can and will change by the weekend. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka/ or www.windy.com. To monitor the latest Humboldt bar conditions, visit www.wrh.noaa.gov/eka/swan. You can also call the National Weather Service at 443-7062 or the office on Woodley Island at 443-6484.

The Oceans:

Eureka

Boats looking for salmon got back on the water Tuesday after a couple days off due to rough seas and wind. The salmon were in roughly the same spot as when they left them biting Saturday. It was limit-style fishing for the fleet that wanted another shot prior to the salmon season closing until Aug. 1. There were some Pacific halibut caught last Friday while conditions were ideal. Not many have ventured to the Cape but, with salmon closed, that will likely change. Ocean conditions look good through at least Friday.

Trinidad

The salmon bite was good over the holiday weekend out of Trinidad. According to Curt Wilson of Wind Rose Charters, there was a good bite on the 00 line in 240 feet of water on Friday. He said, "Some halibut were also caught, with most coming straight out in 250 to 275 feet of water. The rockfish bite remains excellent and the ling cod have showed up in good numbers. The crabbing is good, with limits or close to it for the boats fishing rings/nets." Salmon season will close after May 31 and open again Aug. 1.

Shelter Cove

According to Jake Mitchell of Sea Hawk Sport fishing, the salmon fishing has slowed down a little bit with boats getting about a fish and a half per rod. "There hasn't been any concentration of fish," said Mitchell. "Boats are getting them from the whistle to the Hat. You don't have to go far for rockfish, it has been pretty good just south of the whistle to the Old Man." Salmon season will run through July 4, reopening on July 22 and running through Sept. 5.

Crescent City

According to reports, the salmon bite went belly up on Tuesday after having consistent bite for the entire month of May. The water temperatures could have slowed it down, it was a chilly 48 degrees Tuesday. The rockfish bite remains excellent and there were some big lings to 30 pounds caught prior to the wind picking up. There have only been a few Pacific halibut caught but there should be much more effort now that salmon season has closed until Aug. 1.

Brookings

Lingcod and rockfish action has been good out of Brookings, while just a few Pacific halibut are being caught, reports Andy Martin of Brookings Fishing Charters. He said, "Catch rates for halibut improve in June and peak in July and August. Anchovies have arrived in the Port of Brookings and are thick outside the harbor, a good sign for the June 18 coho salmon and June 25 king salmon opens out of Brookings. The later-than-normal ocean salmon opens in Brookings coincide with what is typically the peak season. May and early June are closed on the Oregon side to reduce harvest of salmon bound for the Klamath River."

Fresh Fables

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

It's a brand-new month on the cusp of a new season, so let's try something new in the Setlist. Rather than fill your head with information about some weird thing I'm reading, a new obsession I've developed, doom-filled mutterings about incoming degrading horrors from our broken government or an overwrought story about personal hardships, how about an interview? Faun Fables is an innovative and influential neo-folk act whose origins go back a quarter of a century to a brainchild of creator Dawn McCarthy. Along with her partner Nils Frykdahl, she has created a tome of music as beautiful as it is challenging, inviting the listener to visit a world in which songs create living spirits and theatricality becomes as serious and playful as life itself. I interviewed McCarthy and Frykdahl ahead of their upcoming show at Synapsis on Thursday, June 2 at 7:30 p.m. ($15-$24). Local acts Die Geister Beschwören and Bosporus open the evening with a complementary blend of sympathetic weirdness. I enjoyed the rapport in this interview and hope that you, dear reader, get a kick out of it, too. See you in the shade of the marquee.

NCJ: Can you talk briefly about the genesis of Faun Fables and when Frykdahl joined?

McCarthy: I had used the words Faun + Fables before, years before when I was focusing more on illustration and little comics. Somehow incorporating the feeling of stories was always important to me ... so when Nils and I met up and started working together, pretty much right away, he had his rock bands, but the work with me took more shape and could become Faun Fables. I've had other collaborators in Faun Fables briefly over the years, especially when Nils was very busy with Sleepytime Gorilla Museum, but it always settled back into being the two of us at the core.

Frykdahl: Upon hearing Dawn's demo cassette, I knew I had work to do and I'm still doing it.

NCJ: Is this your first tour since the pandemic?

McCarthy: It is our first real showbiz since the pandemic and although we haven't started it yet — Eureka is our first show, actually — it feels amazing just to even have it there waiting in the near future.

NCJ: Have you played in the area before?

Frykdahl: Actually, the little coastal hamlet of Petrolia has been a home away from home for me since I was 18, with my long-time musical collaborator Dan Rathbun having grown up there. Faun Fables has played at the Mattole Valley Community Center more times than I can remember and to the widest possible age-spread from babies to ancients. We've also played in the bustling metropolis of Eureka — we actually performed our mobile rock opera The Transit Rider here in 2006.

NCJ: Do you have any plans for a new full-length album in the near future? Are you writing or recording?

Frykdahl: Yes, we're well into our next album, but thrilled to be hitting the road whether the album is done or not. Such is the state of things!

NCJ: What material are you drawing from for your current live setlist?

McCarthy: We have a large amount of songs to consider, at this point it feels like it's all quite new! But we are reaching deeper into our catalog than we have in many years, so that means that we are having to relearn songs. We are also doing a selection of songs that honor the music that kept our family in good company during all the social quarantining.

Frykdahl: We are meeting ourselves of many years ago for some of the songs and it seems like we were having a pretty good time.

NCJ: You have worked with multimedia stagecraft in your performances before. What can the audience expect for this show?

McCarthy: Not much multimedia on this tour but we have a kind of daughter chorus-ensemble joining us for some of the show, and that's something we're very excited about.

Frykdahl: Wind, a powerful wind of retribution.

Friday

It's the first Friday of June, the beginning of the end of spring and the countdown to summer. Many of us are making our summer travel plans but if travel is outside of your current grasp, fear not: The Siren's Song is putting on a free trip tonight at 8 p.m. What kind of trip? Why, Trip to Oz, a multimedia presentation of footage of the world's only single-state continent with a psychedelic performance of looped percussion provided by Oz the Natural Noize-maker. Vocals and guitar will be handled by the mononymous Trip.

Faun Fables plays Synapsis on Thursday, June 2 at 7:30 p.m.

Saturday

I caught late word that my featured show this week has been canceled, so assuming you are not living it up in the streets of Eureka for Arts Alive, I suggest heading a little farther south to Ferndale. There, at the Ferndale Repertory Theatre at 8 p.m., you can catch a showing of everyone's favorite cult musical, The Rocky Horror Show ($18). And, while I'm more of a Phantom of the Paradise guy myself, it's always good to support local theatrical productions.

Sunday

True Life Trio is a Bay Area group of three women who sing harmonies, both a cappella and accompanied by accordion, fiddle, guitar and percussion. The music they play is essentially world music, drawing from the global songbook with selections heavily favoring the folk traditions of Eastern Europe and the American South. This evening at 7 p.m., the ladies will be holding court in the big top circus tent outside the Arcata Playhouse, a perfect venue for this type of thing ($15).

Monday

The Siren's Song is yet again filling a gap in what would otherwise be a sleepy Monday night in the north end of the 707. Los Angeles indie rock duo Jaklen Ro plays a sweet, strummy sort of music trading in the kinder and brighter sides of the human experience at 10 p.m. ($8). I really enjoyed the song "Life With You," featuring the delightful line: "Life with you is a dream, darling, save me from waking." Tonight the band joins local favorites Clean Girl and the Dirty Dishes and newcomers Think Tank for a show that is absolutely guaranteed to make you clap your hands and say, "Yeah."

Tuesday

OK, another show at the Siren's Song but this one is completely unlike last night's fare. Drift is an act from the City of Angels that styles itself as the next big thing in the world of epic, rave-adjacent, techno metal. The costumes are reminiscent of '90s arena bands Rammstein and Mushroomhead. The music is enervating and keyboard-driven, with a surprising number of sonic nods to '80s power bands like Europe. If you want to see a spectacle, come over to the club at 8 p.m. with a ten-spot in hand.

Wednesday

In a classic episode of The Simpsons from that bygone era when the show was funny and relevant, Homer defends his harsh punishment of Bart by saying, "If I stick to my guns, the boy could wind up Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. If I fail, the best he could do is judge at a Mr. Tight Buns Competition." When I was a kid I laughed at this line, with only a vague understanding of what a Mr. Tight Buns competition would even look like (this is years before I ever visited Florida). And while tonight's gig isn't exactly that, it certainly gets its mail from the same post office. Humbrews presents ladies night with Men Next Door Uncovered at 8 p.m. ($20, $35). Billed as a two-hour, choreographed, "Magic Mike experience," all I can say is that none of these men look like my neighbor, John. ●

Collin Yeo (he/him) suggests that everyone who wants to understand this vulgar, fanatical and flatulent age should read Boccaccio and Dante, and study the art of Bruegel. We are living in a grotesque and holy time. He also lives in Arcata.

Tip, tip, hooray! It's Crabs baseball season. Dust off your stadium seat, slap on your cap and head to the Arcata Ball Park for Humboldt Crabs Baseball's Opening Night this Friday, June 3. The game starts at 7 p.m., gates open at 6 p.m. with the World Famous Crab Grass Band (sweet Caroline!) and all the usual trappings: Crabs swag, burgers, hot dogs, beer, snacks and exuberant hecklers on the first base side. Then on Saturday, June 4 at 6:30 p.m., it's Crabs Hoody Night — wear your favorite Crabs hoody and show your spirit. Rounding out the weekend on Sunday, June 5 at 12:30 p.m., watch the Crabbies play and enjoy the Crab Grass Band returning to liven up the crowd. Plus, kids get to run the bases. Gates are at 11:30 a.m. Tickets for all Crabs games are available online at humboldtcrabs.com or in person at Wildberries Marketplace ($10 adult/$4 kids 3-12). Tickets will not be sold at the gate.

Summer's here and the time is right for dancing in the ... garden and park. If all we need is music, sweet music, Humboldt's got us covered. Every first Sunday of every month during summer, Humboldt Botanical Garden offers Music in the Garden from 1 to 3 p.m. This Sunday, June 5, bring a folding chair or blanket and enjoy live music by Irie Rockers in the beautiful garden setting ($5 - $15). And select Thursdays during summer — including Thursday, June 9 — you'll find Music in the Park (and food trucks, too) from 6 to 8 p.m. at Pierson Park in McKinleyville (free).

Past participant Joan Gold's studio. File

The Venn diagram circles of art lovers and nosy people overlap once again and yes, that includes us. The first weekend of North Coast Open Studios is here. The return of the annual countywide community art event where artists open their creative spaces to the public kicks off this Friday, June 3 from 6 to 9 p.m., and continues Saturday, June 4 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, June 5 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. (free). See the studios where the magic happens and maybe even pick up some pieces direct from the artist while you get your steps in. Find more information on artists, studios locations, etc. at northcoastopenstudios.com.

Heads up, Humboldt: While the county's masking mandate has been lifted, Public Health is still strongly recommending masking indoors in public, social distancing and "avoiding crowds and poorly ventilated spaces." COVID-19 is still with us, so be sure to check the protocols at event venue

With the Boys

Men and Top Gun: Maverick

By John J. Bennett

screens@northcoastjournal.com

MEN. I first became aware of Alex Garland as a screenwriter in 2002, when 28 Days Later was released. Directed by Danny Boyle, that picture — not to be confused with the almost contemporaneous Sandra Bullock rehab comedy with a very similar title — delivered a new, kinetic perspective on the zombie/rage virus genre (yes, I realize there is a distinction between the two; consider it acknowledged, purists) and served as a reminder of the vibrance and versatility of Boyle as a director. It also introduced me to Garland as a writer of formidable imagination and, perhaps (this was early days), a bleakly misanthropic artistic sensibility. His novel The Beach had been adapted by John Hodge and directed by Boyle a couple of years earlier — being a contrarian, I was something of a DiCaprio denier at the time. I sort of remember the movie being serviceable but the novel is lost to my ever-diminishing recollection.

Garland worked steadily for the next decade, publishing novels, writing original screenplays, adapting the work of others (including 2012's vastly under-appreciated Dredd) and scripting video games. In 2014, though, he left an indelible impression with his feature directorial debut, Ex Machina (2014), a sort of brain-breaking exploration of the approaching singularity, isolation and, in what would become a primary theme, man's inhumanity toward woman but with, you know, a sense of humor.

In 2018, Annihilation, which Garland adapted from the novel by Jeff VanderMeer and directed, pushed even further into the realm of psychological sci-fi established by Ex Machina. It defies description and is certain to distance or offend a significant portion of casual or uninformed viewers, but to me remains rapturously, disconcertingly immersive, with a mood and atmosphere that actively resist ambivalence or disengagement. It was one of the great achievements of that year but hasn't enjoyed the legacy response of Ex Machina.

How it feels every time I check the news. Men

I've been remiss in attending to the limited television series Devs (2020), which Garland created, wrote and directed. This is largely to a strong sense that the person with whom I cohabitate would not enjoy it and forcing the issue would create a situation that could diminish the experience of the work; it's about compromise.

Garland returns with Men, which might seem to be a simpler, scaled-down version of his vision but might in fact be his most thematically complex work to date.

Harper (Jessie Buckley) has rented herself a beautiful manor house in the English countryside, at least in part to recover from the complicated, untimely death of her husband. The landlord Geoffrey (Rory Kinnear) seems nice enough, despite his provincial mien and awkward, unintended boorishness. But everyone else in the village, all male and eerily alike, immediately resonates as a villain, most of all the mute, naked, self-lacerating individual who develops an unhealthy fixation with Harper. And then things start to get weird.

Men is haunting, grisly, scary and, above all, a heady exploration of blame, love and undeserved guilt. Buckley excels as always and Kinnear does freaky, consistently surprising work. As an aside, the theater in which I saw this was almost filled with teenagers who were dismayed by what they saw; I'm not sure what they were expecting. R. 100M. BROADWAY, MINOR.

TOP GUN: MAVERICK. While much of the world has been anticipating this new entry with a protractedly held collective yawp of joy, I've been indifferent. Despite my childhood fascination with the US Navy's F14 Tomcat fighter plane, despite my being of an appropriate age to think of Top Gun (1986) as a vital, influential text, I've never felt any particular connection to it. Which is not to say I haven't seen it, because I most certainly have, long ago. For whatever reason, I was too busy being traumatized by Full Metal Jacket (1987) and losing myself in Apocalypse Now (1979) to fully engage with the probably purer pleasures of Tom Cruise's arrival to super-super-stardom. I have friends, more dove-like and vocally anti-military than I, who count the first Top Gun among their all-time favorites. Go figure.

As usual, how wrong I was. Cruise returns, these decades on and coming off a somewhat mixed bag of late career choices, to deliver a movie that I suspect he is literally the only human being capable of shepherding, executing and opening. Rejoining two of his favored recent collaborators, director Joseph Kosinski and co-writer Christopher McQuarrie, Cruise has made a purely enjoyable, seemingly unassailable work of pure energy and connection. Neatly sidestepping potentially thorny politics, Maverick instead drills into the pure physicality and mental plasticity required of a modern fighter pilot. And it is note-perfect. PG13. 137M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK, MINOR. ●

John J. Bennett (he/him) is a movie nerd who loves a good car chase.

NOW PLAYING

THE BAD GUYS. Sam Rockwell, Craig Robinson, Awkwafina and Marc Maron voice an animated adventure/comedy about reformed animal criminals. PG. 100M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

THE BOB'S BURGERS MOVIE. The animated feature has the Belchers battling a sinkhole. Starring Kristen Schaal, H. Jon Benjamin and Dan Mintz. PG13. 102M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

DOCTOR STRANGE IN THE MULTIVERSE OF MADNESS. Benedict Cumberbatch dons his cape for another Marvel mind bender. PG. 126M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

DOWNTON ABBEY: A NEW ERA. Big dowager energy. PG. 125M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

EVERYTHING EVERYWHERE ALL AT ONCE. Reality unravels and multiverse Michelle Yeoh comes to the rescue. With Ke Huy Quan, Jamie Lee Curtis and the legendary James Hong. R. 146M. MILL CREEK.

SONIC THE HEDGEHOG 2. Animated video game sequel about a very fast hedgehog. PG. 122M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

NOTICE OF PROPERTY TAX DELINQUENCY AND IMPENDING DEFAULT
Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3351, 3352

I, Amy Christensen, Interim Humboldt County Tax Collector, State of California, certify as follows:
That at close of business on June 30, 2022, by operation of law, any real property (unless previously tax-defaulted and not redeemed) that have any delinquent taxes, assessments, or other charges levied for the fiscal year 2021-22, and/or any delinquent supplemental taxes levied prior to the fiscal year 2021-22 shall be declared tax-defaulted.
That unless the tax defaulted property is completely redeemed through payment of all unpaid amounts, together with penalties and fees prescribed by law or an installment plan is initiated and maintained; the property may be sold subsequently at a tax sale to satisfy the tax lien.
That a detailed list of all properties remaining tax-defaulted at the close of business on June 30, 2022, and not redeemed prior to being submitted for publication, shall be published on or before September 8, 2022.
That information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by Amy Christensen, Interim-Humboldt County Tax Collector at 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, California 95501 (707)476-2450.
I certify or (declare), under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct.

Amy Christensen
Interim-Humboldt County Tax Collector

Executed at Eureka, Humboldt County, California, on May 20th, 2022. Published in the North Coast Journal on May 26th, June 2nd, and June 9th, 2022.

NOTICE OF IMPENDING POWER TO SELL
TAX-DEFAULTED PROPERTY
Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3361, 3362

Pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code 3691 and 3692.4, the following conditions will, by operation of law, subject real property to the Tax Collector's power to sell.

- 1) All property for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for five or more years.
Note: The power to sell schedule for nonresidential commercial property is three or more years of tax-defaulted status, unless the county adopts, by ordinance or resolution, the five-year tax default schedule.
 - 2) All property that has a nuisance abatement lien recorded against it and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.
 - 3) Any property that has been identified and requested for purchase by a city, county, city and county or nonprofit organization to serve the public benefit by providing housing or services directly related to low-income persons and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.
- The parcels listed herein meet one or more of the criteria listed above and thus, will become subject to the Tax Collector's power to sell on July 1, 2022, at 12:01 a.m., by operation of law. The Tax Collector's power to sell will arise unless the property is either redeemed or made subject to an installment plan of redemption initiated as provided by law prior to close of business on the last business day in June. The right to an installment plan terminates on the last business day in June, and after that date the entire balance due must be paid in full to prevent sale of the property at public auction.
The right of redemption survives the property becoming subject to the power to sell, but it terminates at close of business on the last business day prior to the date of the sale by the Tax Collector.

All information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption will be furnished, upon request, by Amy Christensen, Interim- Humboldt County Tax Collector, 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, CA 95501, (707)476-2450.

The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of June 2022, is shown opposite the assessment/parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.

PARCEL NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

The Assessor's Parcel/Assessment Number (APN/ASMT), when used to describe property in this list, refers to the Assessor's map book, the map page, the block on the map, if applicable, and the individual parcel on the map page or in the block. The Assessor's maps and further explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the Assessor's office.
